Interview Summary
Boys Ranch Client #1 – They have been at the program for two months. They were previously at J5 and detention before J5. They like the boys ranch more than J5. The food is “iffy” here. They get enough food and water is available at all times. Most of the clients here have a problem with authority. Some staff don’t enforce the rules consistently. They get along with clients. They feel safe here. No one has put their hands on them at the Boys Ranch or J5. The groups are cool but “annoying”. It’s easy to make up school credits here and they will graduate from the Ranch. They had a home visit last Friday. They wish they could have Spotify here. Client #2 – They have been for nine months and hopes to discharge in January 2025. They were previously in detention. They are having cake today as it’s their birthday. Today, while in class, they had a break down over their dad and they told their friend at the program. They like it here, there are lots of opportunities. They feel safe here. The food is ok, depends on who the cook is. They get enough to eat. They go to the vocational center every morning for one hour. Right now they are working on small engines. They have a group of friends at the program. They get along with staff. J5 Client #1 – This is their first program. They feel staff are easy to talk to. No one has put their hands on them since being at the program. The food is good, it comes from the Ranch. They get enough to eat and each client has their own water bottle. They have groups one time a day.

They have workbooks for anger management. They have phone calls every other and have privacy for those phone calls. They would like more visit times.

Client #2 – They have been at the program for 40 days. They came from detention, J5 and was previously at the Boys Ranch. They like the Ranch; it's less restrictive. They expect to be at J5 for another 20 days and expect to go back to the Ranch then. They feel safe here and felt safe at the Ranch. The food is good, sometimes they get enough, sometimes they don't. Portions are small, but they are allowed to have seconds. Water and snacks are always available. They like all the staff. They have phone calls every other day, and they have privacy even though people are around. They like the structure at J5. Staff are always helping him.

Observations

Boys Ranch
The program currently has 30 clients, with a capacity of 30. The property was clean and in good repair. Once clients complete the Ranch program, they are eligible to move to the Independent Living Apartment on campus, which has three beds. The Ranch has a workout room that is used everyday by the clients. At the vocational center on campus, they are currently working on learning about small engines. They also recently worked with Resin.

J5
The program currently has 12 clients, with a capacity of 24. The program was clean and in good repair. The program has two pods inside the Deschutes County Juvenile Detention Center, however only one pod is currently being used. The program has been unable to fully staff both pods. J5 receives food from the Boys Ranch.
