419-400-0090(1)(a)(B)(b) Children's right to privacy during phone calls. Interview Summary
During my visit, I interacted with the case manager, deputy director, other youth in the milieu and two staff. Two youth were individually interviewed ages 16 and 17 with stays in the program for 5 and 2 months respectively. Both reported that this is their first program, feel safe here, and they described ways the program is helping them. Activities and outings were described and both report that school is going well, working on credit recovery and school completion courses. They have regular contact with people on their approved contact list and time isn't restricted, although limited depending on how many other youth have calls and the schedule that day. Privacy during phone calls usually happens within the phone booth, where staff have eyes on youth, however another youth damaged the phone so its not working. The staff that they have a better rapport with are trusting and they show care and concern. They give input in their treatment plan and feel listened to. They shared that the case manager and therapist are "amazing". At times, it can feel like staff are not treating youth equally as if the same rules don't apply to all; however, they understand how each youth could have an individualized plan or need a different approach. Despite this, the youth said they've learned to reframe those thoughts and stay focused on their goals and success. Neither youth report any issues getting their medications as prescribed. They report the program does well at assisting in their education, helping youth with mental and physical health, and transitioning into jobs. If there was something they could change about the program, it would be more staff to have different groups going to different activities, and better food. Note: All meals are prepared at the County Jail and brought over to the youth. The program continues to make efforts in improving food satisfaction and has seasonings and sauces available to enhance the flavor. Other food options are available to supplement, only after the youth eat 50% of their tray.

Observations
The construction of the new corner office and the adjacent reconfiguring of a youth bedroom wall and door has been completed. The milieu was clean, tidy, odor free, and comfortable temperature. The kitchen room was tidy and clean including the refrigerator and the sink has been replaced with a new 3-compartment sink. Youth bedrooms had varying levels of cleanliness/messiness typical for this age range, some more tidy than others, some with extra piles of clothes on the floor; however, there were no odors or evidence of unhygienic conditions. The program has a weekly schedule for bedroom cleaning. Refer to new findings above regarding the bathrooms. A dinner tray was observed which included a main dish, salad, veggie, fruit and a pastry for dessert.
