Interview summary
I interviewed two of the seven youth that are currently in the Crimson Rose program. I interviewed the youth separately in the adjacent gym to maintain a space of privacy. On a scale from 0-10 (0=worst program and 10=best program) the youth rated Crimson rose as a 7.5 and 8 on that scale. Youth reported feeling safe in the program. Food was described as “pretty good” and “amazing”. Both reported having enough food to eat. One youth reported they loved the homemade style mac and cheese meal. Both youths reported attending various treatment groups: Dialectical Behavioral Therapy (DBT), Anger management, boundaries, Relapse prevention, drug and alcohol, breaking free of addiction, and teen relationships. Both youths reported receiving weekly counseling and monthly therapy. Both were able to list their treatment goals and what is required to successfully discharge from the program. One youth shared they are learning how to be “honest with myself and others”. The other youth reported they have learned in program “how to control my anger, drug and alcohol skills regarding relapse prevention.” For fun, youth reported playing cards, reading, drawing, watching tv, and listening to music. Youth reported going on outings in the community such as the park, library, and local sores. One youth reported they wished recreation time was longer but does appreciate it. The other youth wished there were more books on unit. When debriefing with program staff they indicated they are looking forward to having the new classroom and dedicated education space with a library in that location. Youth report they can check out books at the library. Staff reported they enjoy working at Crimson Rose. Two of the staff are taking on more duties and are excited about the ability to take on more responsibility and challenges. I was told one of the staff working today during my visit had her daughter go through the program and that was an impetus to work at Crimson Rose due to her daughter’s success.

Observations
Klamath County Juvenile Department Director Dan Golden gave me a tour of the new construction of the new Juvenile Department administrative offices and Crimson Rose program. Sheet rock is up, siding is currently being installed and work is expected to be completed by July of 2025. The big news is that Steve Quick, Crimson Rose program director, recently retired on March 31st, 2025. There has been some shuffling of job duties, and interviews start tomorrow for an open case manager position. When I arrived at the current Crimson Rose program I observed a multidisciplinary team meeting occurring with a crimson rose youth, crimson rose case worker, and an Oregon Youth Authority Juvenile Parole and Probation Officer. When I entered the day room youth were participating in their afternoon DBT group. I found youth bedrooms to be clean and organized. I noticed more pictures on the walls and the outside and inside of their bedroom doors. Youth are posting their treatment goals, inspirational quotes, and family photos. Crimson Rose is housed in an older detention style pod; however, they continue to make this environment less institutional. I observed the youth and staff interacting positively, and youth were eager to share their experiences with the program when I requested their input, and there plenty of volunteers to speak with me.
