Interview Summary
During the unannounced review I spoke with two clients and had discussions with the Adriel, Director of RCC, and Robin, the Director of the RCC expansion opening soon. The first client interviewed had been at the program for just over a month. This particular client was very unhappy with their placement and didn't feel like their needs were at the same level as the other clients. They stated this was by far the worst placement they had been in. Client said they were blind in one eye, didn't currently have any glasses, and the previous three doctor's appointments had been canceled. They were concerned about their teeth as braces had recently been removed and they felt their teeth were moving back to where they were. Client stated their caseworker had lost their retainer and they haven't received a replacement. They stated they were started on a medication which lowers their blood pressure and now they are always dizzy when standing up. They didn't like when on "constant" (meaning constant supervision) they only received a "constant blanket" (blanket designed to not be utilized in self-harm or suicide) and they weren't allowed to talk to their peers. Client stated witnessing multiple restraints each day is very traumatizing. They did relay they have not been placed in any restraints, only their peers. Youth said they were supposed to have at least an hour of therapy each week but had only seen their therapist four times in six weeks and only for 10-15min. Client also said their peers can make them feel unsafe, and one gave them a side hug without asking first causing them to be very uncomfortable. They were also upset about their hygiene products which they felt were being wasted by staff. They stated they have expensive shampoos, and staff just automatically put it in a paper cup even though client does not wash hair every time they shower. When this occurs staff will just put it in the garbage can instead of trying to put it back in the bottle. Youth likes school and gets straight A's but struggles at times because none of their peers take school seriously, and it makes it hard to concentrate. They said the food was better than cat food and detention food, and the snacks were plenty. In review with management there were responses which lent perspective to each of the above situations. The eye appointments did not occur due to various factors such as unsafe behavior and the Child Welfare Case Worker not providing transportation as discussed. The meds lowering the blood pressure were prescribed by the doctor, and the dizziness symptoms had been discussed with the doctor by the client. The doctor still felt it best to maintain the current medication. The hygiene products being wasted had some merit. Management is to discuss preserving hygiene items personal to the youth and how important these items can be versus the program provided hygiene items. The other issues mostly revolved around the atmosphere, which would be typical of any high acuity milieu. The second client interviewed had been at the program for about four months. They feel safe in the program and are comfortable discussing any concerns with multiple staff. Client said the food was better than detention, they got plenty to eat, and the snacks were good. They noted in particular the meat snacks as a new snack option they really liked. Youth stated in school they would like to work towards their GED. Client said there are plenty of activities throughout the day and week. Youth participates in their planning and recently had their discharge date pushed back while awaiting a placement. Client noted one concern around phone calls saying they are never able to get a hold of their brother. Client thought their brother worked evenings to early morning but had been unable to contact them to verify the schedule. Client said they felt staff do everything really well and do a good job of taking care of everyone. The phone call situation was discussed with leadership, and they will work to accommodate contact between client and their brother to ensure regular opportunities to talk on the phone.

Observations
The program was clean and in good repair. Bedrooms, bathrooms, laundry rooms and all other shared spaces were observed during a walkthrough of the program. Staff were very open when asked questions about routines and procedures. There were no items of concern noted during the walkthrough. Time was spent with leadership talking about paperwork, hotline reports and other administrative items in an effort to increase efficiency and reduce the amount of time staff spend on paperwork versus caring for clients.
